

What Will It Be Like If People Do As These Writings Urge?

It will be common knowledge:

that business people have the central role in society in each country, and globally, because they are most of the economy, because they organise most goods, services and jobs; that that gives them greater power than any other group in society; that they can do it because they are organised, as businesses, and are granted the right to organise; that they are a class, the Business class; that most of the wealth the rich have is from the work workers do for them in their businesses.

It will be the common view:

that business people's power needs to be balanced by everybody else's; that most of them are workers (however well-educated and paid); that they are entitled to be organised too, and need to be.

It would be the norm, widely socially and politically accepted, that almost all of them would be.

As organised workers, the majority will stand up to business people and public sector employers, at work, negotiating together for good conditions and pay, locally and across industrial sectors, and internationally.

It will be widely recognised :

that it is being organised at work that makes the business class most of the economy; that that also gives them political power that can limit governments; that they also have conservative parties and conservative press and broadcast media promoting politics and laws governing business and work relationships that favour them.

It will be recognised :

that like them, workers can use their organised relationships with each other in business, work and public services, to communicate with each other on politics, independently of the businessclass-owned media; that they develop their own politics and support and vote for progressive parties.

It will be recognised :

that the rich get well-off enough to not need public services and public support; that most of their wealth comes from paying workers less than the sale value of what they produce; that that is why they oppose taxes; that it is fair to reclaim that wealth by taxing them to fund good public services and welfare.

Due to the majority being class-conscious as workers and aware of the difference of political interests between them and business people, and organised politically as well as at work, they will always elect progressive governments. They will regulate business people generally to make society fair and sustainable.

v.2019.2 October 30 2019.